Master of Rehabilitation Counselling

“Throughout my learning, I felt supported, encouraged and empowered to succeed. Online study aligned with my lifestyle and work commitments. Putting the theory learned into practice has been instrumental in guiding Virgin Australia to achieve best outcomes through our Disability Management program.”

Bron Taylor

Group Workers Compensation Manager, Virgin Australia Airlines

Rehabilitation counsellors

- have allied health and human service professional knowledge and skills
- work with individuals experiencing injury, disability and/or social disadvantage
- facilitate achievement of occupational, personal and social participation goals

This is through working with the individual strengths and capabilities in a coordinated rehabilitation plan, guiding necessary changes in both the person and their environment.

Why study rehabilitation counselling at Griffith?

- Our staff are qualified rehabilitation counsellors with industry experience and contacts (as well as being researchers passionate about evidence-based practice)
- Mix of theory and practice-based study equips graduates to work in broad range of rehabilitation counselling settings, with clients and their diverse needs and goals
- Enhances employability with relevant skills and knowledge to be an effective and qualified rehabilitation counsellor
- Includes a supervised placement, to apply theory to practice in a rehabilitation counselling work setting.
